1. The airfield located west of the railroad station of Loshnitsa (54°15'N/28°50'E), Belorussian SSR, on a double-track railroad line, measured about 1,500x2,000 meters. Most of the airfield was surrounded by woods. Some hangars standing close together were in the northwestern corner of the field. Tires and searchlights were stored in two wooden sheds located in the northeast part of the field. The airfield had a railroad connection.
2. Three four-engine aircraft with nose wheels and very long fuselages were always in front of the hangar. Regular flying was not observed. Twin-engine planes and conventional fighters occasionally made intermediate landings.
3. A former German improvised airstrip was about 1,000 meters northeast of the road branching off the Borisov-Moscow highway to the railroad station and airfield of Loshnitsa. This field was unoccupied.
